Nothing but a silly little time waster, but I still wholly recommend it regardless. This is one of those games perfect for when you're stressed and need to vent on something... or someone in this case, although you're rather limited at first, it gets better as you unlock more weapons, and gradually being able to reduce the ragdoll to nothing more to scattered, dismembered limbs.

It is a little unsettling that the ragdoll can still scream... after being decapitated.. So interesting game. You must have been tried this.. Amazing DLC, adds so many new things to do. The maps look beautiful, as do the new units. You can see so much love and work has been put into it, and it's fairly cheap too. I say this is one of the DLC's that someone needs to get.. cool and fun. It's always refreshing to see a horror game that focuses on unnerving moments, rather than jump scares. However, I don't think this game is worth six dollars. Get it on sale.. Crashes on startup - unplayable. Win7-64, 16GB RAM, Nvidia GTX 760. For me, the only point to pay the money to buy the game on Steam is to have it work without issues on a modern O/S.

If you enjoyed the first "You Have 10 Seconds" -- <http://store.steampowered.com/app/510050/> (which I also recommend and actually like better, partly because frankly it's not as sadistic) -- then the platforming here will feel familiar, with a lot of additional tricks up the developer's sleeve, such as sections you have to shrink to get through or platforms that are covered in glue. Most of these tricks are enjoyable, but since one new obstacle involves invisible ceilings and floors that only reflect light when touched, one of their levels requires you to shrink and then to blindly hop between surfaces hoping to land on something, which feels more like trial and error for its own sake than something you actually figure out with logic or skill.

Compared to the first game, "You Have 10 Second 2" brings its own benefits and drawbacks: you can change the color of the box you play as, you don't have a limited supply of lives anymore, the number of levels and worlds is a lot higher, and they don't always grant you a new ability after completing them anymore. You now have more room to experiment, since dying a handful of times in a world no longer forces you to start the world over, but some levels--two of them in particular, as noted in some other Steam reviews--take advantage of this and crank up the difficulty long past the point of being entertaining. Imagine a more punishing and confined Flappy Bird, and you'll have the right idea; at least the name of the second one makes fun of itself. I did enjoy certain batches of levels that felt heavily inspired by VVVVVV, where level tops/bottoms and sides wrapped around like contiguous areas. World navigation is now done in a hub area instead of being selected from a menu. This wasn't really necessary, but at least the entrance doors look neat.

My only problem with the game's impressive level count is that it didn't quite know when it wanted to end. Between the bonus and extra levels, the game effectively has three finales, none of which are as exciting or memorable as the one in the first game. There is a level editor if you want to try that, but one thing I and others noticed is that (as of this writing) there doesn't seem to be a way to exit back to the main menu while in a world, since the Escape button merely pauses the game. On another note, the animated backgrounds didn't seem as distracting here, but the music--while fine--didn't seem as interesting as that of the first game. That's a small quibble, however, and if you enjoyed the first game, you'll probably enjoy this if the notable increase in difficulty doesn't get to you.. When you 1st play this game it screams nostalgia; if your a former wonderer of Azeroth, you'll see what I mean with the coloured gear system. The game has charm and doesn't take itself too seriously, but the plotline is engaging enough to follow on with.

The combat is what keeps you coming back for more though. It is fast (if not too fast, a speed slider in the options menu would make this game much superior), tactical and highly addictive. Your forced into being tactical or you'll face the consequences of being over run by the enemy. Or, for example, spacing your team out so aoe's only affect 1 member etc.

However, there are major drawbacks to the title that in the end have ruined it.

1. After your initial playthrough, your mind will begin to race with other party structures. Don't let it, because there aren't any. Your not allowed to remove the tank from the party (WHY?!) so my 9.30hr game to do a 4 rdps party was a complete waste of time. I tried again for a 3 rdps + tank party, but this also isn't doable because you cannot down bosses without the healer, which limits a game that has 8 characters, yet somehow only two party structures? (tank, healer + 2rdps OR tank, healer, rdps, and the ONLY MELEE?!, the rogue). That is downright embarassing from a game that has the word "tactics" in its title; without party versatility, you are, basically, not allowed to be creative in how you play your tactics through party customisation.

2. The final zone lets this game down tremendously. Like any other RPG, you upgrade your party gear throughout play as much as possible (duh). However, you seemingly need to grind out somewhere I would guess between the amounts of 15-20k to complete the game. You'll be the max lv20 by this point so it really is just a gold grind. If you have been gearing up all the time, you will have little money upon reaching the final zone of Eriford.

However, this area also has a shop....with all new gears, and ofc you still need money and scraps (mats from battles) to upgrade your pieces, because not all gear is buyable, some you have to buy at a low stage and upgrade to be epic.

I've tried the final boss many times but got tired of having to literally grind on trash in the area to be able to save money....to be able to buy pots....to be able to have another attempt.....at the LAST BOSS IN THE GAME?!?!

The other option is grind that 15-20k, upgrade all gear and then yes I'm sure the last boss would be fine. Have fun grinding for 2 hours to clear the last boss if that's for you....

No thanks...waste of time, waste of money...avoid, you'll only be disappointed eventually when you realise the limitations and chains this game places upon you.

I'm going to go and buy a real RPG called FFV.. Very nice set for the city, comes with alot of inside details for modern settings.. Swanky apartment is nice! So many interesting things... Fish are my favorite. You can zap them with lasers! I wasn't good in helicopter, but will keep trying. Very much joy!. cool game for only 0,99 cents is realy good!. Brilliant. I'm biased towards old school Point n Click pixel graphic games (AGS!) but this one was "good enough" for my fallout fanboy nephew- impressive to hold attention to that demo. Great job, my favorite steam release in a while!. Very cute game that goes along the same lines as Diner Dash. If you like time management games, then you will like this one. Colorful graphics, interesting characters, and a good soundtrack make this game stand out.. This is an ingenious puzzle game that looks absolutely stunning in VR. Some of the puzzles require trial and error, and I did get stuck in a few cases and looked at walkthroughs and immediately felt stupid because I missed something obvious. They all were enjoyable to work through. Another nice feature in this game is I never felt any fatigue or nausea playing it.
